A new independent statutory board to manage the supply of gas is on its way.

The IGIC replaces the existing Gas Industry Board (GIB), which was abolished on 1 October 2015. The IGIC will receive the GIB's responsibilities, including: providing advice to the Minister relating to natural gas supply; overseeing the responsible, safe and efficient operation of the gas sector; promoting collaboration and cooperation, and providing advice to the Minister relating to energy regulation.

The IGIC will consist of five members, with one member representing the consumer and one representing the regulator. The other three members will represent the gas industry.

The IGIC will begin operating on 1 October 2015, and it will be responsible for the ongoing management and development of the gas sector. The IGIC will be responsible for delivering on the commitment of improving safety, and influential industry associations have been invited to provide input on the IGIC's work.

The Gas Industry Act 2016 includes provisions for the creation of a new government body that will oversee the gas sector. The new body, known as the Independent Gas Industry Commission (IGIC), will replace the existing Gas Industry Board (GIB). The IGIC will be responsible for providing advice to the Minister on natural gas supply, and will be tasked with overseeing the responsible, safe and efficient operation of the gas sector.

The IGIC will consist of five members, with one member representing the consumer and one representing the regulator. The other three members will represent the gas industry. The IGIC will begin operating on 1 October 2015, and it will be responsible for delivering on the commitment of improving safety, and influential industry associations have been invited to provide input on the IGIC's work.

The IGIC will be responsible for delivering on the commitment of improving safety, and influential industry associations have been invited to provide input on the IGIC's work.